

Week 06 Reflection – Jared Linares

- 20 pts Questions Cognitive: (Wow, I learn?... Ok that is deep!)
  -
- Why is this week's topic important for teamwork?
  - Being able to connect with teammates through understanding each other's faults, strengths, and knowing which methods of communication work best for certain people. In business environments, we need to be able to have a deeper understanding of how each group member functions. A personal user manual helps in that communication and streamlines the learning process.
- How does your experience relate to other experiences you have had?
  - I guess this specifically relates not really to a specific experience, but a host of experiences where I wish I knew what different people valued. If I had a personal user manual for many of the coworkers that I've had over the years I feel that I could've better served them and accomplish the many goals we had during our work.
- How does your experience relate to other classmates' experiences?
  - My brother who is also taking the same class, but with a different professor, and I often have misunderstanding about certain things. Having a personal user manual would help us understand each other better as we'd be able to reference the manual. That would probably stop certain arguments or misunderstanding from occurring. And help us understand each other a bit better.
- Tell me about what you taught someone? And what did they learn, that they didn't know before?
  - I think I mentioned this before, but I've often talked with my father at length about the many topics that are discussed in class. The many articles that have gone over the importance of having a personal user manual and the benefits of having one, were great. The concepts that I mentioned to my father were new, and he created one to see what it was like, and it was really neat to be able to share that lesson and experience with him. What was really new and rather innovative was the idea that in a work environment with new teammates and customers, being able to share a document that best handles the best modes of communication allows for faster more efficient communication.
- If this was a religion class, how would you relate this week's topic to the gospel?
  - I would say that if this were a religion class, this week's topic would relate to the Gospel in a model of personal development. The personal user manual relates to many of the values and parts of ourselves like physical, intellectual, and vision. When our personal user manual matches up with the things that we learn in church, we can be more open to new experiences and others. Additionally, when it comes to worldview and lifeworld, they together should be in-sync with the Gospel.

